PREFACE

The impetus to prepare the current volume of the Kress Library printed Catalogue derived initially from the greetings which the first volume received, that issued in 1940 and covering the material in the Kress Library which antedated 1777. Such eminent scholars as Professors Luigi Einaudi, Earl J. Hamilton, and Jacob Viner spoke of the paucity of bibliographical guides in the areas of historical business and historical economics, praised the form which we had utilized in that volume, and expressed the hope that added volumes might be published. Professor Viner was particularly desirous of an extension in the time-period of coverage. He felt the period between 1776 and 1850 to be especially arid of bibliographical aids to students.

Scholars in various institutions and working in various fields of research, men such as Raymond de Roover, Fritz L. Redlich, and Warren G. Scoville, have made extensive use of the 1940 volume; the librarians at the Goldsmiths' Library in London and the Seligman Library at Columbia have commented upon the employment which they found for it; and book-dealers have frequently identified items in their rare book offerings by citation of the numbers carried in this 1940 volume.

These various commendations did not lead immediately to action. The war intervened, and I was myself drawn into the direction of research in economic and business history. The latter effort did have the consequence of fortifying my own high appraisal of bibliographical tools.

Recently the needs of scholars working in economic and business history were brought to the attention of the Rockefeller Foundation; and the latter generously made a grant which permitted the Library to reactivate its endeavors in the field of business and economic bibliography. First a supplement to the original volume was prepared and published, a volume based primarily upon the acquisitions of material antedating 1777, which had been made by the Kress Library in the fifteen years since the initial compilation had been compounded. Now we present an extension of the original volume.

The selection of stopping points in the continuous flow of business and economic literature is largely arbitrary. The volumes of the Catalogue attempt to cover, at least as fully as Harvard resources permit, the three major areas of changing business practices and institutions, changing economic conditions, and changing economic thought. Perhaps the events of the last area are most clearly differentiated: specific important books are published in specific years. At all events it seemed a reasonably good mnemonic device to close the present volume with the appearance of David Ricardo's Principles of Political Economy and Taxation, just as the initial volume had been terminated with the publication of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. Also a forty-year interval was adequate to attempt to handle in a given effort.

In all important respects the current volume aims to be a continuance of those which have previously appeared—using generally the same coverage in subject matter, indicating the possessions of the same institutions, and recording the same type of data in the individual entries.

Perhaps the subject coverage is actually somewhat narrower in the present tabulation. When the field of political economy had not been separated from such fields as political philosophy and when the total body of literature was less considerable than in the decades after 1776, material of more diverse character was probably included—more items on philosophy, more on technology, etc. Surely the legal and quasi-legal entries were more numerous in the earlier book than in the present one, since, after 1700 or thereabouts, royal proclamations cease to have significance for our purposes.

There were difficulties in drawing an intelligent dividing line within certain bodies of publications in the 1777–1817 era. A large percentage of the controversial pieces provoked by the French revolution contained some reference to church lands, or paper money, or hard times; and the items here presented may well be no more than samples of the literature which would have to be consulted by students of this period. (The Harvard College Library has scores, if not hundreds of volumes of bound pamphlets, many of them anonymous, relating to French affairs in the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic eras.) Somewhat the same situation obtains relative to the controversial pamphlets stirred up by the projected union of Ireland and Great Britain in 1801, or the American reactions to the English and Napoleonic edicts in the years before 1812. In all these and similar controversies we have endeavored to give at least the principal economic documents.

Beyond the legal and quasi-legal material the present volume is distinguishable from its earlier companions through a curtailment in the presentation of data upon governmental documents. On the American side, Federal documents have been well covered in such publications as the Check List of United States Public Documents, 1789–1809, or Benjamin P. Poore's Descriptive Catalogue of the Government Publications of the United States, September 5, 1774–March 4, 1881; while the publications of most of the eastern states have been handled adequately for our purposes in the series of volumes prepared by Miss Adelaide R. Hasse and entitled Index of Economic Material in Documents of the States of the United States. When governmental documents were reprinted as private publications, they have been included, if available at Harvard. The fact that a topic aroused that much interest seems worth indicating by the citation of what was merely a sort of re-issue.

Of foreign governmental materials it has seemed advantageous to draw lines in accordance with the availability of bibliographical aids. All British governmental publications have been included—in so far as available at Harvard—if they were printed in the years antedating 1801. Beginning with this last year there are separate indices of Parliamentary documents, which cover this type of publication satisfactorily. We have, however, followed the practice mentioned above with respect to American materials, that of including governmental items which were privately reprinted; while, as far as other European materials are concerned, we have included everything that is contained in the Kress Library or other Harvard libraries—except the voluminous statutory items and commentaries which are to be found in the Harvard Law School Library.

The proper arrangement of the bibliographical data for this 1777–1817 period caused some perplexity. We desired that the arrangement should be that most useful to the largest body of students. It did not seem an adequate excuse that we were following the practice of the first volume if, in fact, students working in a given national area had little concern with items of other national origins. In the end we decided upon a compromise.

It did seem advantageous to all students, whether working in the American, English, French, or other economic and business histories, that they should be conscious of corresponding publications that appeared contemporaneously in other national areas. Again, it is of some significance that the writings of Adam Smith or Arthur Young, William Cobbett or Thomas Malthus were published elsewhere than in England. However, we did recognize that many of our potential readers would be particularly concerned with American materials. Accordingly we have put these numbers in boldface—all items of American and Canadian imprint—although leaving them otherwise in the same sequence as if they had been published elsewhere.

In order that we might avoid the use of numerals running to five digits we have not attempted to add the entries in the present volume to the last numeral in the original 1940 volume (7,279)—just as we did not add those of the Supplement covering further pre-1777 items. The entries in the Supplement carried the prefix "S", while the entries in the present volume will be found to carry a prefix "B".

If the admonitions of Professor Viner are fully satisfied, a fourth volume will be compiled and published. Perhaps this volume could extend through 1848, the date of the appearance of John Stuart Mill's Principles of Political Economy. I hope that this task will be attempted and carried through.

It is a pleasure to record the Library's indebtedness to its staff—the whole group in so far as the acquisition or binding of individual items has been involved, and specific persons, especially of the cataloging wing, as far as the preparation of this volume is concerned. Mrs. Dorothea Reeves actually cataloged most of the items from the Kress Library here listed; Mrs. Evelyn Draper has edited the current compilation as she did, in whole or in part, the initial volume of 1940 and the Supplement; while Miss Helen E. Honey, as head of our Cataloging Department, has supervised all such operations. They have been the agents whereby the School and the Rockefeller Foundation could make a contribution to the world of scholarship and research.
